Enamelware vases

Made by Hill and Son of Lye. The novel multi-coloured finish made them stand out from competitors' products. Part of a large collection of this company's products saved by a former employee when the company closed in the late 1960s.

On the 18th February 2012, Black Country Living Museum will be opening up its object stores and site to volunteer Wikipedia editors.

Volunteers will go “behind the scenes” at the museum, in search of inspiration for new Wikipedia articles.

The day will include:

- A curator led tour of the Black Country Living Museum’s hidden collections.
- The opportunity to explore collections from other local groups and museums including: Smethwick Heritage Trust, Black Country History Society, Pen Room and Assay Office.
- There will be space to write articles on your chosen objects of interest.
- An experienced Wikipedian and Museum curators on hand to offer practical advice and support.
- Complimentary fish and chip lunch included as a reward for your hardwork and support.

Places are limited therefore you will need to pre-book your place by emailing:
helen.taylor@bclm.com

Requirements: Attendees will need to have some knowledge of using Wikipedia, they will be required to bring their own laptop with power cable & also a digital camera should you wish to add your own images to articles.
